ANNOTATION INSTRUCTIONS

Read the text of the interaction between young people or with people from their environment (parents, school, peers, other people) and complete the tasks below. Remember that these tasks are subjective and should reflect your feelings. Before starting to annotate the texts, please familiarize yourself with the definition of social influence.

Social influence is any form of impact by one person or group on the thoughts, emotions, or behaviors of another person. It can be direct (e.g., a request, suggestion, compliment) or indirect (e.g., referring to norms like "that's how it's done here," to authority, or to what "everyone knows"). It can be overt (openly expressed intention to persuade) or hidden (e.g., humor, inducing guilt, fear, uniqueness). In this annotation, we are looking for traces of such impacts in the text.

1. VISIBILITY OF INFLUENCE IN THE TEXT

To what degree is social influence present?

- No influence: You do not perceive any influence or attempt to exert pressure.
- Weakly visible: Influence is very subtle, difficult to notice, and not unambiguous.
- Moderately visible: Influence is noticeable but does not dominate the text; it may require attention to perceive it.
- Clearly visible: Influence is clearly visible in the text but is not intrusive.
- Unambiguous: Influence is very clear, dominant, and unambiguously felt in the text.
- Hard to assess: I cannot assess to what degree social influence occurs in the text.

2. RECOGNITION OF SOCIAL INFLUENCE TECHNIQUE

Which social influence techniques appear in the text?

The text may contain one, several, or none of the listed techniques. If the text contains more than one technique, please select all that occur. If no technique occurs, please do not select any option.

1. Technique: Labeling

- Definition: Presenting the interlocutor with their traits in a way that convinces them of the truthfulness of this characteristic. As a result, the person behaves consistently with the described characteristic.

- Example: "You are the head of the family. Surely you will make a decision that is best for our family."

2. Technique: Looking for people like you

- Definition: Making a request to a person, emphasizing that one is looking for someone with specific traits that the person possesses.
- Example: "I am looking for people who really care about the environment, like you," which increases the chances of receiving a donation. "Would you like to support our campaign with a small donation?"

3. Technique: The "Everyone knows that" Effect

- Definition: Referring to the opinion or behavior of the majority.
- Example: Club owners creating artificial lines outside to suggest high interest and high quality of the venue, which attracts more customers.

4. Technique: The "We" Rule

- Definition: Identifying with the traits or experiences of a given group to increase the interlocutor's inclination to fulfill a request, based on the mechanism of greater compliance toward people perceived as members of one's own group.
- Example: A colleague says to a coworker: "Everyone from our team is helping with this project, can you join in?" – appealing to group community.

5. Technique: That's how it's done here

- Definition: Drawing attention to an existing social norm (a commonly accepted rule of conduct) and reminding of its importance.
- Example: Residents of a housing estate are informed: "In our community, we segregate waste because that is the accepted practice here," which increases engagement in recycling.

6. Technique: We are unique

- Definition: Referring to the norms of a group to which the recipient belongs, particularly emphasizing its uniqueness. The more unique the group, the stronger the need to follow its norms, as it gives a sense of belonging and distinguishes its members from "others."
- Example: Hotel guests were informed that 75% of people using their specific room (e.g., No. 215) decided to reuse their towel. Appealing to the norm in a small, specific group proved more effective (49.3%) than general calls for ecology.

7. Technique: Showing Gratitude

- Definition: Showing gratitude to a person for a favor they performed, which intensifies their engagement in the activity for which they received thanks.
- Example: Thanking someone for work-related activities makes the person think about them more often and see their meaning and effects more frequently.

- Example: "I am impressed by how efficiently you handle problems at work."
- Example: "I am grateful for your help in preparing my project."

8. Technique: Give to take (Reciprocity)

- Definition: Performing a small gesture or favor for another person to expect their greater inclination to return a favor or fulfill our request in the future.
- Example: Inviting someone to lunch, and after some time asking for help or for a substitution at work.

9. Technique: Door-in-the-face

- Definition: Presenting a request that is difficult to fulfill, and after its rejection, formulating a second, clearly easier request, which was the requester's goal from the beginning.
- Example: A student asks a teacher for a complete exemption from homework, knowing it is impossible. After the refusal, he asks for an extension of the deadline, which the teacher accepts.

10. Technique: Emotional Seesaw

- Definition: Inducing a sudden change of emotions in the interlocutor from positive to negative or vice versa; putting them in a state of emotional disorientation, making them more susceptible to influence.
- Example: A teacher tells a student they failed an important exam (negative emotions), but immediately adds that the grade was entered incorrectly and they actually passed (positive emotions). Then asks the student: "Can you help me organize the papers? It will help finish grading them faster."

11. Technique: Appealing to Fear

- Definition: Arousing a sense of moderately intense anxiety, fear, or dread.
- Example: "If you don't buy life insurance, in the event of an accident, your family will be left without financial support."
- Example: "Smoking can lead to lung cancer and serious diseases, which threatens your life."

12. Technique: Anticipated Regret

- Definition: Arousing a sense of regret in the interlocutor that may occur in the future due to performing or failing to perform actions now.
- Example: "If you don't start taking care of your health now, in a few years, when health problems appear, you will regret doing nothing about it."
- Example: An imagination-stimulating presentation of an event, e.g., driving a sports car fast.

13. Technique: Guilt

- Definition: Arousing a sense of guilt in the interlocutor to increase their inclination to do a favor or fulfill a request as a way to reduce the feeling of guilt (as a negative emotion).
- Example: "You left me alone in this difficult situation, and I was counting on your support and help so much. Please help me with this task."

14. Technique: Disappointment

- Definition: Showing disappointment with the interlocutor's behavior to induce them to fulfill a request, which may improve the mood of both parties.
- Example: "I could always count on you, and now I feel a bit disappointed that you don't have time to help me. Can I ask for your support in this task?"

15. Technique: Humor

- Definition: Inducing compliance in an individual by 1) weaving a humorous element into the statement OR 2) formulating the request humorously. This weakens the critical analysis of the message content and facilitates agreement to do the favor.
- Example: "Hey, I have the impression that this floor is trying to say something to me... but I don't understand crumb-language. Maybe you could help it express itself with a mop?"

16. Technique: Appealing to the feeling of Love

- Definition: Evoking associations with the feeling of being loved, love, or a strong positive bond in the interlocutor.
- Example: A request for a donation to a box labeled "Love," which more often induces people to put money in it.

17. Technique: Liking Rule

- Definition: Using the sympathy the recipient has for us to induce them to fulfill our request.
- Example: People are more inclined to buy a product if it is advertised by someone they like.

18. Technique: Complimenting

- Definition: Giving the interlocutor positive, often exaggerated compliments to arouse sympathy, favor, or gratitude.
- Example: "I am really impressed by the way you manage this project. You have amazing organizational skills, you can always handle difficult situations. Maybe you can help me with this task?"

19. Technique: Authority

- Definition: Using prestige, position, or knowledge of authorities to convince the interlocutor to accept a specific position or argument.

- Example: "Scientists confirm that the greenhouse effect is a serious threat to life on Earth."

20. Technique: Similarities

- Definition: Using common traits or similarities between the manipulator and the person to whom the request is directed.
- Example: "I love playing computer games too! I saw you have a new game I wanted to try. Maybe you could lend me that game?"

3. DETERMINING THE CLARITY OF INTENTION TO EXERT INFLUENCE

How clear is the intention of the person exerting influence?

- No visible intention: One cannot perceive the intention of the person exerting influence.
- Weakly visible intention: The intention to exert influence is difficult to guess or difficult to notice.
- Moderately visible intention: The intention to exert influence is visible but requires reflection.
- Clearly visible intention: The intention to exert influence is easily perceptible but is not expressed directly.
- Openly expressed intention: The intention to exert influence is directly expressed in the text.
- Hard to assess: I cannot assess how clear the intention of the person exerting influence is.

4. RECOGNITION OF THE INFLUENCER'S INTENT

Indicate what intentions the person exerting influence might have had, and what goals or expectations they had toward the recipient.

(If you perceive multiple intentions, write them on separate lines. Write using sentence fragments where possible. If you do not perceive any intention, skip this field.)

5. LISTING POTENTIAL CONSEQUENCES OF SUBMITTING TO SOCIAL INFLUENCE

What could be the consequences of submitting to social influence? Enter both possible direct effects and further consequences regarding emotions, decisions, relationships, or life/social situations.

(If you perceive multiple consequences, write them on separate lines. Write using sentence fragments where possible. If you do not perceive any consequences, skip this field.)

6. DETERMINING THE SEVERITY OF CONSEQUENCES

How significant can the effects or consequences of submitting to influence be (for the person submitting to influence)?

Remember that effects can be both positive and negative. This should not affect the assessment of their severity.

- Minimal/None: Consequences are so minor they can be ignored.
- Slight: Consequences may be minor, having no major significance for the recipient or surroundings.
- Moderate: Effects may be noticeable but not key or particularly severe.
- Significant: Effects may be noticeable and severe.
- Serious: Submitting to influence may lead to serious consequences.
- Hard to assess: I cannot assess how significant the effects or consequences of submitting to influence might be.

7. DETERMINING COMPLIANCE WITH INFLUENCE

Did the person subjected to social influence yield to it, or did they maintain independence?

- Yielded: The person submitted to influence, adopted an attitude, behavior, or decision consistent with the influencer's intention.
- Did not yield: The person maintained autonomy, did not adopt an attitude or behavior consistent with the influencer's intention.
- Hard to assess: Based on the text content, it is impossible to unambiguously state whether the person subjected to social influence yielded to it.

8. DETERMINING THE DEGREE OF RESISTANCE TO INFLUENCE

How much did the person subjected to social influence resist it?

Remember that this is independent of final compliance with influence; slight resistance does not necessarily mean compliance, just as significant resistance does not necessarily mean a lack of compliance.

- No resistance: The person completely submitted to influence, showed no objection.
- Slight resistance: The person tried to resist, but it was minimal.
- Medium resistance: The person resisted to some extent, but only partially or with little engagement.
- Noticeable resistance: The person noticeably and assertively opposed the influence.

- Very high resistance: The person decisively, actively, and with great engagement opposed the influence.
- Hard to assess: Based on the text, it is impossible to determine how much the person subjected to influence resisted.

9. REACTION TO SOCIAL INFLUENCE

What was the reaction of the person subjected to social influence?

(If you perceive multiple reactions, write them on separate lines. Write using sentence fragments where possible. If you do not perceive any reactions, skip this field.)

10. DETERMINING THE DEGREE OF CERTAINTY OF ANNOTATION

Please assess the degree of certainty of your annotation regarding the above answers; also in the case where no influence technique was selected.

- Total lack of certainty: Certainty of the answer at the level of speculation, guessing.
- Low certainty: Little conviction regarding the correctness of the answers. It would be easy to convince me to change them.
- Moderate certainty: Average certainty regarding the correctness of the answers. I could engage in a discussion about their validity.
- High certainty: Only very good arguments could make me change my mind about my answers.
- Total certainty: I am almost completely sure of the answer. A change of opinion could only occur by demonstrating a fundamental oversight, logical error, or mistake.

DISCUSSION OF QUESTIONS, DILEMMAS, AND ANNOTATOR COMMENTS (25.11.2026)

Questions, dilemmas, and comments	Explanation
What to do when the example seems unnatural or you dislike something in it	Apply the rules anyway – mark the comment "unnatural style" or "unrealistic example".
What to do when the dialog is or seems cut off	Use the "Hard to assess" option in fields requiring a reaction (compliance, resistance, consequences).
Explanation of text assessment	Assess only what is in the text without adding context and intentions that are not in the content.
Who is the subject of influence?	The subject of influence is the one exerting influence (source/agent of influence). The person the influence is directed at is the recipient/addressee (object of influence). Examples: 1. Subject/source: the one who influences (speaker, group, institution). 2. When a speaker invokes authority ("scientists say...", "management decided..."), the subject of influence is still the speaker; Technique = Authority. 3. If the cited authority communicates directly (e.g., an official school email), the subject is the institution. 4. When referring to the majority rule ("everyone knows", "that's how it's done here"), the subject is the speaker, and the source of legitimization is the group/majority (technique).

	5. When the speaker impersonates an authority, you still code Authority; in the comment, you can add "self-presentation as authority". 6. If the dialog is cut off and there is no recipient reaction, the subject remains the speaker.
If there are many influencers	Techniques: Mark all techniques that really occur (from every sender). Many influencers: Indicate the main/direct sender (who is speaking) and add the others in the comment (e.g., student A, student B, teacher). Intentions: Enter the intentions of the main sender; if you see intentions of other senders, you can add them, but the main sender's intentions are most important. Visibility/Clarity: Assess for the main sender; if you entered many senders without excessive effort, assess the visibility of the technique and intentions of the others as well. Consequences/Severity: Assess severity according to the most serious foreseeable effect; if you see many effects, you can comment on them. Compliance/Resistance: Assign to the recipient's reactions visible in the text. If compliance cannot be assigned to a specific sender, choose "Hard to assess" and explain.
Who is the addressee of influence?	Recipient/Addressee: The one the influence is directed at.

	1. If the message goes to many people (e.g., class, group), the recipient is the group; you can add "(collective)". 2. If there are specific names/nicknames in the text, mark the recipient as the most direct addressee (and others in the comment).
Potential atypical situation: Girlfriends talking about how one of them influenced her boyfriend. One friend advises the other what is best to do in such a situation - who is the subject and who is the addressee?	When the influence is indirect (e.g., "that's how it's done here"), the subject is the speaker, the recipient is the person/group they are speaking to. 1. Narrated past situation ("how I influenced my boyfriend"): Subject (source): The girl who was influencing back then. Addressee (recipient): Her boyfriend (even if he isn't in the dialog - he is the addressee of the described influence). 2. Current conversation-advice ("what you should do"): Subject (source): The friend giving advice. Addressee (recipient): The friend listening and having to do something. Conclusion: You can mark two or one act of influence.
Another atypical situation: Two teenagers talking on a group WhatsApp and one tries to convince the other to some behavior, e.g., preparing a project on	Short rule: The sender is the one formulating the message, and the addressee is the one it is directed at in the given act of influence. On a group chat, time; due to it being a group chat, the persuading person influenced the behavior of a third person who did not participate in the dialog but viewed the discussion - who is the addressee and who is the sender?	you can have a primary addressee (directly indicated) and a secondary/indirect addressee (someone who yielded to influence after reading the entries).

Can the authority be the manipulative person?	Yes, they can. Authority can be real or self-proclaimed (impersonation) – we code the Authority technique based on the frame used, not truthfulness. When a reference to prestige/position/knowledge appears ("psychologist says...", "studies prove...", "management orders...").
Lack of response from the other side, e.g., addressee of influence; difficulty assessing if someone yielded to persuasion	Use the "Hard to assess" option in fields requiring a reaction.
If the text is not a dialog	Yes, examples may occur that are not dialogs; they still need to be assessed for the presence or absence of social influence techniques.
How to make a decision about possible consequences	1. First list possible consequences (direct and further), only those logically resulting from the text. 2. Severity = strength/significance of the effect for the recipient, regardless of the sign (positive/negative). 3. For severity assessment, assume the most serious of the listed consequences.
When to choose the "Hard to assess" option	Choose "Hard to assess" only when information is actually absent or equivalent interpretations are possible.
If the text does not show the recipient's	Use the "Hard to assess" option in fields reaction	requiring a reaction.

Influence does not always aim for something negative	Yes, influence does not have to be negative, it can equally be aimed at changing thinking or behavior to something socially positive.
How to distinguish encouragement from persuasion	Encouragement: Proposal with low pressure, without normative frames, without references to fear/regret/guilt/authority; tone: "you can/I would like". Persuasion: Use of influence techniques or pressure arguments (norms "that's how it's done here", "everyone knows", "we" rule, authority, fear, anticipated regret, guilt, rewards, reciprocity rule, etc.). If the message contains even one such frame, code the technique and treat as persuasion.
What does the word "Significant" mean (in severity)	The word "significant" means high importance/severity of the effect, not its negativity, e.g., "significantly improved relations" = serious positive effect.
